The Al-Ameen Giving Box: Supporting Palliative Care

A single pebble may go unnoticed, but countless pebbles together create a breathtaking landscape.

This is not just a saying; it is indeed a proven action.

A session on palliative care was conducted at a college. After the session, later the students were given an opportunity to go for house visits with professionals to have hands-on experience. Watching the realistic happenings about what they have heard about in the classes ignited them to do something towards palliative care. The NSS students took the initiative to act as the lead and started to take action.

They conducted discussions and meetings with teachers, management, and other authorities of the college. After meticulous efforts, the students finally brought their idea into reality: 1 rupee from every student in 1 month; It has been a year since this happened.

Yes, we are talking about the 1 rupee a month mission conducted at Al-Ameen College, Edathala, initiated by the NSS students, which started on 5th January of 2025 to support Arike Palliative Care, Palarivattom. The unshaken spirit of the students and sincere support from the management and Teachers of the college resulted in the mission being a great success. Hats off to the college. Your action towards help definitely deserves immense appreciation

Volunteer Diaries

"I was once someone who would faint at the sight of blood. Even as I began my internship, that old fear lingered within me. However, working in palliative care changed everything. Today, even when I witness deep, complex wounds being dressed, I no longer feel the urge to turn away. Instead, I feel a profound responsibility to stand by the patient and their family, offering the emotional strength they need in those moments. The most significant realization of this journey hasn't just been about the patients, but about the 'Caregivers'. We often focus solely on the patient's pain, but we rarely see the silent struggle of those who spend years within the four walls of a house, dedicating their lives to caregiving.

I met a mother who was once a dancer and a professional. For the last five years, since her loved one fell ill, she hasn't stepped out of her home. Her own dreams, joys, and social life have vanished. The mental stress she carries is immense. I realized then that caregivers need someone to talk to just as much as patients do; they need a support system to keep them from breaking. This experience has also transformed how I look at my own family. I used to wonder why my aunt, who cares for my bedridden grandmother, was often irritable or upset. I see it clearly now—it is the weight of 'Caregiver Burden,' the exhaustion of providing round-the-clock care without a break. We must make it a point to visit these caregivers, check on their well-being, and offer them our support. Palliative care has taught me that while we treat the patient, we must also hold the hand of the one who cares for them."

Managing Medicines Safely at Home

Personal hygiene is closely linked to comfort, dignity, and emotional well-being during illness. Regular body cleaning helps prevent itching, rashes, and unpleasant odour. Cleaning the mouth after meals reduces dryness and discomfort and helps the patient feel refreshed. Wearing clean clothes and changing bed linen regularly improves comfort and sleep quality. Hair care, nail trimming, and gentle grooming contribute to a sense of normalcy and self-respect. Handling hygiene needs patiently and respectfully helps maintain dignity and reduces emotional discomfort.
