Corporate Volunteers Gain Exposure to Palliative Care

Corporate volunteering is increasingly becoming an important way for professionals to engage with community health initiatives. Exposure to palliative care not only creates awareness but also equips individuals with a basic understanding of how to support people living with long-term or life-limiting illnesses within their own families and communities.

As part of such efforts, Arike Palliative Care recently began collaborating with corporate volunteers through the “V-Serve” initiative of V-Guard Industries. The programme offers employees an opportunity to understand community-based palliative care through structured training and field exposure.

The programme includes three days of learning and experience. The first day, conducted in February, introduced participants to the philosophy and need for palliative care. This is followed by home-care visits with the Arike team, where volunteers observe how patients and families are supported in their homes.

So far, more than fifteen volunteers have participated, with more expected in the coming weeks. The initiative also helps participants understand how to care for bedridden or home-bound patients within their own families or among relatives and neighbours. Through such collaborations, Arike hopes to encourage greater corporate social commitment, enabling professionals to contribute their time, skills, and awareness to strengthen community-based palliative care.

Arike warmly welcomes your company to join hands in this initiative and be part of building a more compassionate community.

Volunteer Diaries

During a recent CSR immersion through V-Serve, the volunteer initiative of V-Guard Industries, I had the privilege of shadowing the team at Arike. What I witnessed left a deep imprint on me ; especially my interaction with Ujjwala, a nurse who embodies what it truly means to find one’s Ikigai. What stands out most is her empathy. In palliative care, clinical competence is essential, but compassion is transformative. Ujjwala brings both. Some people don’t just do a job. They live a calling. Ujjwala is one of them. True to her name, she shined bright on me, radiating with inspiration!

24/7
Emergency
Home Care

Kudos to Arike for striving hard to establish proof of concept for this operating model. Was impressed with their 24/7 call centre, doctor on call arrangements, app for nurses to handle cases and register details and centralised tracking and monitoring. If this model scales, Kerala may well be creating history, as a society investing in world-class palliative care that is accessible to all.
