Compassion in Action

Ujwala, a staff nurse at Arike, has been part of the organization's journey since its early years, serving patients and families with dedication and compassion. After completing formal training in palliative care, she joined Arike as one of the first nurses in the team and has since spent years providing care and support to people living with serious illnesses. Through her work, Ujwala has witnessed the many challenges faced by patients and their families. She believes that caring for people during difficult times offers valuable lessons in empathy, resilience, and gratitude. "The greatest happiness comes from knowing that we have been able to reduce someone's suffering," she reflects.

Home-based palliative care often involves long journeys, unfamiliar locations, difficult weather conditions, and demanding schedules. Yet, Ujwala remains motivated by the trust and hope that patients place in her and the Arike team. "Patients and families wait for us with hope. We should never disappoint that trust." When asked what has kept her committed to palliative care over the years, she points to the satisfaction of making a meaningful difference in the lives of others and being able to support families when they need it most.

For young nurses considering palliative care, her advice is simple: "Palliative care is not something that can be done half-heartedly. You need to come with a full heart, ready to serve." Her journey reflects the compassion, dedication, and spirit of service that continue to define Arike's mission of caring for those in need.

Volunteer Diaries

Thank you so much for having us for the past couple days at Arike. We've really appreciated the opportunity to shadow the team and learn about community nursing, particularly wound care, catheter care, and the day-to-day work involved in the palliative setting. Having reflected on our learning objectives, we feel that we've gained a good understanding of the service, in combination with our time at Pallium, and have achieved what we hoped to get from placement. Thank you again for the warm welcome and all the time and effort that everyone has taken to teach us - we're very grateful for the experience.

- Mention any challenges faced by the patient or family while managing care at home.
- Keep medications and recent medical reports readily available for reference.
- Seek clarification if you have doubts about medications, treatments, or care instructions.
